

QUESTION 11 OF 44: NOT ANSWERED

Which choice most clearly ends the passage with a restatement of the writer's primary claim?

---

A

NO CHANGE

It does not paraphrase the writer's primary claim.

---

B

Although their roles have diminished significantly, librarians will continue to be employed by public libraries for the foreseeable future.

It does not paraphrase the writer's primary claim.

---

C

The growth of electronic information has led to a diversification of librarians' skills and services, positioning them as savvy resource specialists for patrons.

It restates the writer's primary argument, which may be found at the end of the first paragraph: "As public libraries adapt to rapid technological advances in information distribution, librarians' roles are actually expanding."

---

D

However, given their extensive training and skills, librarians who have been displaced by budget cuts have many other possible avenues of employment.

It does not paraphrase the writer's primary claim.
